Editorial.

 UR College life is filled with many duties, each varying in the degree of pleasure afforded, and now we come to that of editing the INDEX, which task we hope to perform in a manner that will be pleasing to our College mates and friends, and an honor to our class, at least, so far as our humble genius will permit.

To the Students of the College, the object of the INDEX needs not to be explained, but to our friends into whose hands it may fall, we would say that it has no pretensions to literary merit, but is simply a student's catalogue published by, and for, the students, and contains, principally, information valuable only to them.

In this, our editorial, we purpose to avail ourselves of the opportunity presented to us, of commenting upon the different departments and branches of our institution. Our college is improving; each class that enters it, by reason of a stricter and more difficult examination, is better qualified to undertake the more advanced branches taught here than those that have already entered, and hence the "average" is being raised. In each class that graduates, a larger number than in the preceding, engage in agricultural occupations, showing that the real object for which the institution was founded is being maintained, and the facilities for teaching this branch increased. Our farm on which is carried on agricultural experiments, so instructive to the students, is being gradually improved; the large stretch of uneven, wet land, opposite the college buildings is being drained and graded, and along our principal avenues trees of various kinds have been set out. If this good work continues it will be but a few years before our farm will be the model for all others in New England.

In mathematics, flunks are no more numerous than formerly,—perhaps fewer. Our late professor, a strict and learned man, has left, and in his place we have an experienced professor, formerly of Marietta College, Ohio, from whom we expect not less than we received from Professor Peabody. In the branch of surveying, especially, we hope that he will continue that most effectual method of instruction, "field work," for which the college has a numerous assortment of instruments and to which they are constantly adding. In the department of languages "conditions" are growing beautifully less frequent: these languages have always been the rock upon which many otherwise good students split, and perhaps the fault is as much with our course of study as ourselves. It is in the nature of most of us to be thorough in what we undertake, and it is difficult to take any degree of interest in what we know we are to obtain a mere smattering of. Perhaps we should do better if we were permitted to devote all the time now occupied with French and German to the one or the other of these.

The chemical department has but one thing wanting:—more time. We hardly commence in the practical part of our instruction when we are called away to some other study.

All other departments manifest decided improvement. The stock at the barn is increasing, and the Plant House is constantly adding to its beautiful collection of exotic plants and flowers.

With all these advantages to aid us, and with careful study, may we not trust, that all who graduate from our institution will be able to obtain, whenever they seek them, positions of trust and honor.

Communications.

C LASSMATES; the time has come for us to bid the INDEX good bye. Almost daily we are reminded of the shortness of the remainder of our college life, but the brevity of our stay has not been so forcibly presented to our minds as when requested to write this final communication. Although we are all happy to think that the time is near at hand when we can launch our boats upon the, for us, untried ocean of life, and rely upon our own vigor of body and mind to propel and direct them on their course, yet there is much of melancholy in the thought of leaving these familiar places, bidding farewell to professors, beloved classmates and fellow students, and thinking that it is hardly possible that ruling Providence will ever again permit us to meet here below. For more than three years, we, as a class, have been bound together by many ties; few have been the discords among us, and all have striven to do honor to their class and classmates. In looking back over our course, we can see many points where our present experience would doubtless have been of great assistance to us, yet for the most part, without being egotistical or boasting, we may be proud of our class record. Our numbers have suffered much from time and adverse circumstances, and there now remains to us about one third of the original class, but we hope that it has been like the purifiers' fire, that has removed the dross and allowed the true metal which remains to shine forth with redoubled beauty and clearness, making up in quality what it has lost in quantity. Let us all remember all that it devolves upon us, the remaining few, to make extra exertion that the established reputation of the class may not fall, but on the contrary, may take a higher stand before all who have been acquainted with our career. And now in closing this article, we would wish to bid farewell to all the members of the faculty, especially those who have shown so much interest in our welfare. One there is whose name is not now enrolled among the Instructors, to whom we feel that we are doubly indebted for his efforts to conduct us through the intricate mazes of mathematics, and also for his patience and perseverance which we know were often put to a severe test. Fellow Students, in bidding you adieu, there is little that we can say, endeavor to emulate our example so far as it may have seemed right, taking equal care to avoid our failings. Cultivate a spirit of class independence. Do what in your own judgment appears for the best, without regard to what other classes have done or may expect of you, and in this way you will gain the hearty admiration, if not open praise of all who know you. Finally, wishing you all the success, both in College and after life, that you have energy to labor for, and courage to receive, we bid you "GOD SPEED." B.

HE past year has quickly flown, and we are no longer Sophomores, but have reached the enviable Junior year. We are just beginning to comprehend the meaning of those familiar words:

"For once I was a Sophomore,
But now I am a man!"

With a slight decrease in number, we begin the second half of our stay at the M. A. C. Nearly all of those who have departed from us are busily engaged in the various duties of science, agriculture and music.—one who was unfortunately called to his home in Japan, has been appointed to an important and responsible position in that country. He still has an almost insatiable thirst for education, and we hope he will have a chance to satisfy it, either in this country or in Europe.

In scholarship we can safely say we stand at the head. During the past year we have had a class average above any other in college. The principles of Mechanics; the Science of Fruit Culture; and the structure, form and habits of insects are a few of the many interesting studies in which we are now engaged.

German and Rhetoric have taken the place of French and History. Zoology with all its prizes for increasing our love of snakes and turtles, is past, but not forgotten; for what we don't know about it isn't worth knowing.

All the practical surveying we are having this term, is finding the bearing and distance of the dinner table, and having arrived at this station we do our level best at "going through" three or four courses while some of us taking PIE as a factor, compute the area and volume, and find they nearly equal infinity.

We have not yet had a chance to try our muscle at boating, but we have enough for all practical purposes, if the manner in which we handle the twelve pounders is a criterion.

Our class nine need have no hesitation in claiming the college championship. No other class has a nine that can beat it.

Class supper at Greenfield and accompanying incidents, and our last farewell as a class to Mr. Naito, are occasions that will long be remembered.

No doubt, the remaining years of our course will pass as quickly as the two that have just gone, and even now we are looking forward to the time when we shall be grave and reverend Seniors.

Classmates, let us so improve the time that is left to us that when we graduate we shall be an honor, both to ourselves and to our Alma Mater.

S.

 LD SOL has made another annual trip, and, as one of the consequences, '77 is again called upon for a communication to the "INDEX." It is with some trepidation that the task is undertaken as I scarce know what is best to be said.

Our first year in College passed very pleasantly and profitably to the most of us with both Faculty and students, and we hope that by doing our duty faithfully and acting as gentlemen at all times, to continue this pleasant relation which now exists.

Such of us as were not leached out have become perfectly familiar with the road to the boarding-house. Last term, however, the head leacher left and mine host appeared in the form of a Bridge; this helped us over the leaching difficulty and was a pleasant help in time of need.

We commence our second year's work with eighteen members in the class, which is four less than it had one year ago; Some have left without any apparent cause; one has gone on account of his father's advancing age, another for the good reason that his father wished him to, and we are sorry to lose one on account of ill health. We hope California air will restore him, and that we shall see him again well and strong. We have had one or two transient members; one of them soon became an invalid and extinguished himself with "Never was any mist'ry t'me."

This class seems determined not to follow customs and so did not set out "class trees" last term as other classes have done before us, but we expect to carry out that commendable practice before this term has reached its close. In the matter of class emblems we are somewhat behind hand, but this will soon be remedied, and we shall see eighteen men shining in new pins.

On returning at the commencement of this term, we were sorry not to meet the face of Prof. Peabody, who, though not appreciated by all, was a thorough and hard working man. He will be remembered by us all, and he has the respect, if not the affection of every one. We welcome his successor, and hope by his aid to go deeper in the dry depths of Chauvenet.

'78 enters a larger class than we did by five. We are glad that there is an increase in numbers. We had hoped and expected a larger difference; they seem to have been well trained at home and retire early for the most part. Two, however, needed some advice and solicitation on this point, and what was more befitting in us having known by experience, which is the best course, than to go and offer them the benefit of our former practice. We look upon them as a good set of fellows, and we hope that the pleasant state of feeling existing at present between the two classes may continue through all our stay in college.

And now, classmates, let us remember that we are at work for the future. We must keep in mind that we are to "AIM AT THE HIGHEST;" in carrying out our motto we must not be satisfied with the attainments of the present, but strive to reach the highest mark in our calling: to do this requires time and labor, and he who would have the best success must not harbor for a moment the spirit of lethargy.

What more fitting couplet can we have to go with our motto than that of Longfellow's:

"Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait."

S.

LAST comes '78. For the first time it devolves upon us to contribute to the "INDEX." Our class, numbering twenty-six, is called a very good one. Brazil and North Carolina are represented in our class, as well as Connecticut and New York. The rest are Massachusetts boys.

As the days and weeks roll by, we are becoming more closely surrounded by the ties of friendship; a friendship which, we trust, will endure and grow stronger through our college course, and prove a mutual benefit in after life.

We like our professors very much indeed, and we shall endeavor, by attendance to study and by scholarly conduct in general, to merit their love and good will. Our class acquires itself nobly in the field, having studied Practical Agriculture in several important branches, relating particularly to the drainage of soil and harvesting of crops. At the boarding-house several of the class exhibit great capacity for food as well as for knowledge. Following "in the footsteps of my illustrious predecessor," the Communicator of '77 last year, I must say something about "our success as rushers." The "Sophs" put some of our number to bed on the second night of the term, which naturally aroused our feelings; so a few nights later we challenged '77 to rush. At first the "Sophs" rather thought that they carried "one Gun(n) too many" for us, but by some chance or other '78 got the rush and still the Sophomores were not happy. We then tried a game of ball. The "Freshies" were the winners by a gratifying score. A second game ended in favor of the "Sophs" by a single run. They were happy.

THE INDEX.

Now all class feeling seems to have subsided and our individual relations with the men of the upper classes are very pleasant. May they so remain as long as '78 remains in M. A. C. Year by year may those foolish things, class enmities, die out and be forgotten.

Let us hope that, when the next "INDEX" comes around, our ranks may retain their present number, each one stronger and wiser and better fitted to go onward and upward. Let us consider, too, that although we begin as "young Fresh" we may, before we arrive at the Senior year, become "old salts" in the ways and by-ways of college life. C.

This department has, during the past year, received the undivided attention of many. The number of entomologists in the several branches is immense, and they manifest a very great degree of interest. SOUTHMAYD,

This expedition was organized for the sole purpose of making observations on the lobster beds at the mouth of dry brook. Among other discoveries may be mentioned the following: McConnel, while hunting for clams, discovers a mermaid floating down stream on the back of a soft shell turtle. Hague, by his keenness of sight and smell, keeps the party supplied with chickens and cord wood. Brooks sees the spirits of departed friends hovering around the molasses jug, which, on closer examination, prove to be horse flies. After the loss of several costly garments, the party returned to head quarters and the explorations are declared a success.
